Subject: Funding to protect the environment

Good day

it has been mooted that charities may be directed how to spend their funds when they try to publicise dreadful decisions made by governments, where the environment is being wrecked.

To direct them to spend valuable monies on projects that are being quite capably handled by volunteer and community groups and organisations, seems predictable in it's endeavour. The present government has continuing form in doing it's damndest to nobble projects which progress the greater good for our planet.

When will they realise that energy from renewable, cheap and environmentally friendly means are the way of not just the future, but NOW?

Please allay my fears, and permit ANY charity the democratic right to disperse their funds in the way of their choosing.

I thank you

Regards

Frank Clarey
