Subject: We must fight the structural causes of environmental degradation
Date: Tuesday, 25 July 2017 11:10:26 AM

The proposal that environmental groups must dedicate a certain amount of their effort to 'environmental remediation' is a joke. While planting trees is all well and good, if that comes at the expense of tackling the systemic and structural problems that are causing carbon emissions, and thus climate change, there is hardly any point. A few stands of trees is going to be offset thousands of times over by opening giant new coal mines!
