To Whom it May Concern

This is a response to the financial system inquiry –incidentally, thank you for providing for input for interested persons.

It is my opinion that Australia must involve itself in the immediate deregulation of legislation that has imposed dangerous consequences on our people through an unregulated banking system.

It is essential that Federal and State Government enact legislation that protects our banking system by imposing a separation of the financially insolvent speculative debts from those banks that manage our accounts of our home owners, farmers, and business people; - we need a banking separation act. All existing indicators dictate that this is an imperative.

In additional legislation must be enacted to empower the Reserve Bank of Australia to be reconstituted to be a bank of credit creation for the Australian people. The Australian Government could then institute National Credit Creation schemes with a focus on nation building and establishes new paradigms for economic measurement

The Australian government must prevent bail-in from being applied to our banking system and thereby allowing what happened in Cyprus to happen in Australia.

I would request a response to this correspondence

Faithfully
