Dear Mr. Murray

I find it unbelievable that people of your knowledge and business acumen would even consider misappropriating the funds of depositors to save a banking system which is clearly in a terminal death spiral.

The amount of unemployment that will be generated from small businesses closing down will bring the country to a standstill from which it will not recover.

I urge you to instead introduce Glass-Steagall legislation to separate commercial and investment banking interests, in an attempt to save ordinary Australians.

Should you wish to continue along the path of "bail-in", please furnish me by return mail with details of where you and your family will be putting your money for safe-keeping.

Yours faithfully
Bob Curtis
