

1. Federal Parliament to pass a bill in line with the US Glass-Steagal law which can protect consumers deposit holdings from the reach of the corporate banking system.
  - All Australian banks should have a clearly labelled separation between their investment processes and public retail arm
  - All Australian retail banks should have uniform lending criteria and make this explicit before taking applications which may impact a person's credit rating
  - All Australian retail banks need to articulate clear policy on lending to small businesses, sole traders or developing entrepreneurs so that Australia can remain creative and productive
  - All Australian retail banks should have a uniform framework on interest rates so that consumers can decide with clarity which loan package is most suitable since at the moment even on websites like Cannex it is difficult to ascertain what each product is offering as compared to another
2. Federal Parliament to legislate to protect consumers from penalties imposed by the banks in line with recent precedents in relation to cheque dishonour fees and late fees
3. Federal Parliament to examine foreign control of the Australian banking system and the impact of foreign vest interests in the nation.
4. For a long period of superannuation policy stability so that everyday Australians who are not on 8million dollar plus corporate banking CEO salaries can save for their retirement without tax grabs on their superannuation
