Introduction

The proposed Commonwealth National Credit Bank Bill (CNCB Bill) contained herein was first published by the Citizens Electoral Council in 1994.¹ In 2001, as the physical economies of both this nation and the world continued to collapse, we republished it in our book, What Australia Must Do to Survive the Depression, whose third printing in May 2006 appeared well over a year before the Global Financial Crisis erupted in 2007. The American statesman and economist Lyndon H. LaRouche, Jr. had long warned that a world financial crash was inevitable as long as the “globalist” policies of floating exchange rates, free trade, and deregulation prevailed.

Now, a new, even more deadly GFC is roaring down upon us, precisely because of the triumph of these policies. The world’s City of London and Wall Street-centred financial system is far more unstable than it was even in the nail-biting days of 2007-08, as evident in the explosion of world derivatives since then to some $1.5 quadrillion today. This new legislation, therefore, is not simply a “good idea”; without it, our nation will not survive. Our manufacturing and agricultural sectors have been gutted by the globalist policies embraced by both Labor and the Coalition since the Hawke/Keating “reforms” beginning 1983, while crucial infrastructure has either been degraded through privatisation and neglect, or just not built. Those policies have also made our Big Four banks ground zero in the greatest bubble in Australia’s history, with their $23 trillion in derivatives constructed purely upon statistical fakery and hot air. In fact, they would have certainly collapsed during 2007-08, when their derivatives totalled only $14.2 trillion, had our government not heeded their hysterical pleas and bailed them out, along with the equally bankrupt Macquarie Bank.

Australia’s banking system, like that of other nations, must be put through government-supervised bankruptcy proceedings pivoted upon a Glass-Steagall-style separation of legitimate banking activity connected to the real economy, from the risky, speculative activities typical of investment banks. The much shrunk remains of these banks must then be subordinated to a new national bank as specified in the following legislation, which is modelled on King O’Malley’s original vision for the Commonwealth Bank. Only such a government-controlled institution functioning for the Common Good has both the intention—as well as the ability—to issue the masses of new credit necessary to revive our physical economy.

There is nothing in the CNCB bill beyond the comprehension of a concerned citizen or conscientious Member of Parliament. To a greater or lesser degree, all banks, whether central, private, or national banks, create credit. The question is, “who controls the volume of that credit, and towards what end?” For private speculation, as at present? Or, for the expansion of the physical economy and well-being of all citizens of the nation? The former constitutes a privately-controlled monetary system, whose focus is merely “money making money”, while the latter constitutes a publicly controlled credit system, which is dedicated to expanding the nation’s physical economy, thereby providing for the Common Good.

The U.S. precedent

Our original Commonwealth Bank was modelled upon the phenomenally successful First and Second National Banks of the United States (1791-1811; 1817-36). Created upon the design of President George Washington’s Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton, these had enabled the U.S. to pay off its staggering Revolutionary War debts, and to launch the explosion in agriculture, manufacturing, and crucial infrastructure projects such as roads, canals, and railroads, which both unified the young nation and soon ranked it among the world’s great powers. The Second National Bank was shut down by the City of London and its Wall Street flunkies, but President Abraham Lincoln revived national banking during the 1861-1865 U.S. Civil War against the British-backed Confederacy, typified by his issue of “greenbacks”. This enabled the Union to prevail, and Lincoln to launch the construction of the first Transcontinental Railroad even as the war still raged.

1. Sovereign Australia II: The Legislative Programme To Save Our Nation.

In the 1930s, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt once again revived the principle of national credit to finance the great infrastructure projects and related measures which brought the U.S. out of the Great Depression, and created the “Arsenal of Democracy” essential to the Allied victory over Fascism.

Our Commonwealth Bank

In a 1909 speech to Parliament, Commonwealth Bank founder King O’Malley proclaimed the model he intended to emulate: “I am the Hamilton of Australia. He was the greatest financial man who ever walked the earth, and his plans have never been improved upon ... The American experience should determine us to establish a national banking system which cannot be attacked.”

O’Malley fought tirelessly for a national bank of “Deposit, Issue, Exchange and Reserve”—a government bank with all of the powers of a trading bank (deposit, exchange), and a “central bank” (note issue, reserve). Though fierce opposition from our City of London-controlled financial establishment had limited its powers to essentially that of a government-owned trading bank, founding Commonwealth Bank governor Denison Miller announced to his staff on the bank’s general business opening day in 1913 that the new bank would nonetheless be a mighty institution: “The Bank is being started without capital, as none is required at the present time, but it is backed by the entire wealth and credit of the whole of the Commonwealth of Australia.” That is, the bank’s security, its capital lay not in some horde of “money”, but in the physical human and natural resources set into motion by its extension of credit.

When the usual flow of foreign finance and investment from the City of London into Australia dried up during World War I, the Commonwealth Bank stepped into the breach. Among other things, it averted a run on the private banks; it organised the financing of the war, including the emergency purchase of a national shipping fleet; and it financed pools of agricultural commodities so farmers could be paid to keep producing for the national war effort.

Former NSW Treasurer and Premier Jack Lang recounted in his book The Great Bust, that the wartime success of the Commonwealth Bank had terrified the City of London because it threatened to break their control over Australia: “Denison Miller had gone to London after the war finished and had thrown a great fright into the banking world by calmly telling a big bankers’ dinner that the wealth of Australia represented six times the amount of money that had been borrowed, and that the bank could meet every demand because it had the entire capital of the country behind it... A deputation of unemployed waited on him after he arrived back from London at the head office of the Commonwealth Bank in Martin Place, Sydney. He was asked whether his bank would be prepared to raise another £350 million for productive purposes. He replied that his bank was not only able to do it, but would be happy to do it. Such statements as these caused near-panic in the City of London.” (Emphasis added.)

The London-controlled private banking interests in Australia seized control of the Commonwealth Bank following Miller’s death in 1923 and restricted its issuance of credits, consequently plunging Australians into needless misery during the Great Depression.

But then, during the perilous early days of World War II, Prime Minister John Curtin and Treasurer Ben Chifley gave the Commonwealth Bank complete authority over the private banks, and the power to create enormous masses of credit. Directed into the physical economy, this avalanche of credit transformed our nation from an agrarian backwater into a high-technology, agro-industrial powerhouse with a world-class machine tool manufacturing sector which contributed decisively to the Allied victory in the Pacific.

Faced with the great tasks of postwar reconstruction, Prime Minister Ben Chifley’s ALP in 1945 passed legislation to make the Commonwealth Bank’s wartime powers permanent. Our anglophile High Court overturned that legislation, and then the Privy Council in London overruled Chifley’s decision to nationalise the banks towards the same end. When Robert Menzies took office in 1949, he set out, at the behest of the private bankers who owned him, to emasculate the Commonwealth Bank, and with it, Australia’s development potential.² He scrapped most of Chifley’s planned Post-War Reconstruction projects, and blocked the Commonwealth Bank from funding the only post-war project that was built, the Snowy Mountains Scheme. In 1959, Menzies stripped the Commonwealth Bank of its central banking powers by creating a separate Reserve Bank of Australia. What was left of the Commonwealth Bank continued as a publicly-owned trading and savings bank until Paul Keating and John Howard privatised it in three tranches between 1991 and 1997.

The Commonwealth Bank was disbanded not because it was a failure, but because its stunning success posed a mortal threat to the City of London and their local satraps’ control over Australia. The Bank’s performance, especially during 1942-45, provides the clearest demonstration that a national bank is essential to the well-being of the nation as a whole. Today, as Australia once again teeters on the edge of disaster, the Commonwealth National Credit Bank will restore to the Australian people the full blessings of national banking—the cornerstone of national sovereignty.

A New National Bank

In 1994, following extensive discussions with Mr. LaRouche, the CEC composed draft legislation to re-establish the Commonwealth Bank as a national bank, with expanded powers and functions along the lines originally envisaged by King O'Malley first, and then by John Curtin and Ben Chifley. A summary of the draft bank bill is followed by the draft legislation itself.

Summary:

A national bank dedicated to fostering the growth of the nation's physical economy is the cornerstone of national sovereignty. Beginning with the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act in 1901, and then the Banking Act 1959 and the Reserve Bank Act 1959, it is clear that Australia was never intended to break free of the colonial yoke. By these laws, the Queen's representative, the Governor-General, is granted awesome powers:

- Section 56 of the Constitution gives the Governor-General total control over the appropriation of revenue or of money, by specifying that no revenue or money bill may be enacted or even debated without the Governor-General's prior written permission delivered to the Parliament on the day.
- The Reserve Bank Act grants the Governor-General the right to appoint the governor of the Bank, and thus to control all Reserve Bank policy.
- Part 2 of the Banking Act 1959 gives the Governor-General the absolute power to issue Authorities for the conduct of the business of banking, the application of any conditions attaching to such Authorities, and the power to determine the criteria and financial standing of an applicant for an Authority to become a bank.
- Part 3 of the Banking Act gives the Governor-General power to impose a trade embargo on all exports from, and imports into, Australia. In addition, the absolutely untrammelled extent of his/her powers is specified in Section 39 of that Act. Note the italicised words in the concluding phrase of this section itemising his/her powers to make regulations:

39. (1) Where the Governor-General considers it expedient to do so for purposes related to:
- (a) foreign exchange or the foreign exchange resources of Australia;
 - (b) the protection of the currency or the protection of the public credit or revenue of Australia; or
 - (c) foreign investment in Australia, Australian investment outside Australia, foreign ownership or control of property in Australia, or of Australian property outside Australia, or Australian ownership or control of property outside Australia, or of foreign property in Australia; the Governor-General may make regulations, not consistent with this Act, in accordance with this Section (emphasis added).

In other words, even though this Act grants the Governor-General all-sweeping powers, they can in addition do whatever they like, regardless of what is specified in this Act!

So far as possible (that is, without constitutional changes), the Commonwealth National Credit Bank Bill (CNCB) strips the Governor-General of these arbitrary powers. Since the new CNCB will be clearly acting in the nation's best interests, should the Governor-General choose to exercise his/her powers under Section 56 of the Constitution to thwart the will of the Parliament in establishing the new Bank, or in the Bank's functioning, a political crisis will follow in which the Governor-General will be exposed for the colonial dictator he/she really is, and can thus be defeated.

The CNCB bill repeals the Reserve Bank Act 1959, completely replacing it. It amends the Banking Act 1959. In particular, it removes the Governor-General's powers and grants them to the board of the new Bank. It establishes a Bank which is responsible to Parliament, instead of to the private individuals who currently run the Reserve Bank, and mandates, by law, the Bank to function in such a manner as to cause a rise in Australia's "potential population-density" through a "rise in the physical output of the nation" and in "the rate of introduction of new technologies into the economy." Precise measures to calculate such rises are specified, so that the Bank has no choice, but to so function, or an investigation is mandated.

All new credit creation by the new Bank shall, by the terms of this Bill, be tied to tangible hard commodity production. The present Reserve Bank's ability to create or extinguish credit by "open market operations" -- is expressly forbidden.

The "power" of the proposed new Bank are greater than those of the existing Reserve Bank, and in addition to those of the Reserve Bank, include power:

1. to issue notes and establish credits to acquire, support and retain the sovereignty of Australia and for the defence of the lives, liberty, and happiness of the Australian people;
2. to control, and if necessary, prohibit, the movement and dealing in currency, of foreign exchange and financial instruments of the widest definition;
3. to plan, measure, and map the economic state of the nation;
4. to provide credits under a National Emergency Credit Issue Act to guarantee up to $100,000 per individual person, the deposits of such persons in the event of a financial collapse of a substantial percentage of the existing trading banks. The confusing claim that the Reserve Bank, under the Reserve Bank Act 1959, has preference over depositors in the event of bank failure, when Section 16 of the Banking Act 1959 states that, priority in the event of bank failure lies with the depositors, has been corrected in Section 55 of the CNCB Bill.

The new Bank will have eight divisions, as follows:

- The Reserve Division, responsible to licence, supervise, and regulate all financial institutions.
- The Mint and Note Division, responsible for the issuance of legal tender, i.e.. notes and coins.
- The National Development Division, responsible to assess the nation's need for credit to provide for the establishment and maintenance of infrastructure of national importance and to provide such credit.
- The Statutory Authorities, Scientific and Educational Institutions Division, responsible to assess the nation's need for credit to provide for the capital costs of land, buildings, plant, machinery, and tangible items, as well as for scientific and technological research and development costs for statutory authorities, scientific and educational institutions, and to provide such credit.
- The State and Local Government Division, responsible for assessing the nation's needs for credit for the establishment and maintenance of infrastructure not specifically provided for by other divisions of the bank and to provide that credit at an annual interest rate not to exceed three per cent.
- The Primary Industries Division, responsible for assessing the nation's need for credit and the issuance of credit expressly for family farmers and other family producers of primary products who directly contribute to increasing the potential population-density of Australia.
- The Manufacturing Division, responsible for assessing the nation's need for credit and the issuance of credit for manufacturing industries of Australia.
- The International Division, responsible for the administration of exchange controls, and provisions of the Act relating to gold, and if and when required, the exchange and clearance of financial instruments and other international matters.

The existing informal regulation of trading banks has been formalised, and provisions have been included to stop banks and other financial institutions from engaging in or financing speculative activities relating to currency, foreign exchange. derivatives, and the like.

All activities of the CNCB are to be open for public scrutiny and statements of account and activities are to be laid before the Parliament within 30 days of the close of each calendar month.
