

Too whom it may concern

I believe the current banking system to be exploitative and highly volatile and needs immediate policy change to avoid possible or even total collapse thus extreme hardship

It is clear to see that all banks are gambling with people's superannuation and hard earned savings on all sorts of dodgy/fraudulent investments

It is obvious that the Stock market in which the banks invest is just a Giant Casino

Furthermore, the governing bodies who oversee the Banks are toothless tigers

This leads to the whole banking system being open to massive corruption by anyone seeking to exploit the lack of regulation to gain criminally on an enormous global level

These acts affect people from all over the Western world

And as we see, always it is the people who already have hardly anything are the ones hit hardest

I think you have to put people before profits

I think to do otherwise is to go against the common good of all people

I believe Glass-Steagall would resolve the risk of exploitation

And put in a system that is fair and stable and not anti-productive and just plainly criminally unjust as the current system is
