

I am horrified to think that you can support a retrospective to 2016 reversal of franking credits particularly on share buy backs when the ATO specifically approved such actions at the time that they occurred.

If you need to act it should be going forward and even then it will break an election promise.

In a perfect world take the proposal to the 2025 election and see how people react.

I am reluctant to say typical Labor tactics but clearly voters cost them the 2019 election on similar tactics. History has a habit of repeating itself.

Clearly this proposal is sneaky and possibly illegal, apart from being downright dishonest.

Just remember any dividends that are franked are already tax paid.

I trust your retro intentions are consigned to a rubbish bin where they belong.

Terry Keating

Voter

Sent from my iPad