Subject: Treasury's attitude to double taxation

I am planning to retire in June and have spent my entire working career in Australia funding a plan to produce a liveable income while including franking credits in the calculations.

I feel quite threatened and insecure following the revelation of treasury's intent

Planned changes seen by me as disastrous probably seem trivial to one receiving a guaranteed retirement income. Governments can certainly be bidden by treasury but popular opinion should be the informing force(as in the people's choice),which I should think was clearly demonstrated with the wipe-out of Mr. Shortens aspirations along those lines a few years ago.

Thank your allowing me to express my distaste for your apparent intentions.
