

I am well retired. My first response is to leave Super alone!

As a public servant thank goodness my Super was saved compulsively before i understood what it was. Having returned to work when children started school my Super did not have that early accumulated amount BUT I had it.

Again thank goodness for portable super.

My late husband was in the construction industry. Each time he moved to a new project/company his contribution was returned to us and put into our mortgage but it did not include the company super. He was in his 40s before he started his own but we missed those many years of accumulated funds.

No don't use Super for housing. If any, only a percentage and a certainty that it does go into a mortgage and not TVs or motorbikes. However that can be manipulated so NO.

Leave super alone. Great system. Saves us from ourselves, especially when young with short term thinking. The permission to take Super out over Covid had made young people realise that 'their' money is there and there is more pressure but don't bend!
