This is a ludicrous suggestion to pay super guarantee on every pay day. Firstly, what army of bureaucrats is going to check it or audit compliance. Secondly, if the government was aware of how business operates it would understand that every month a business has to perform a roll over of it's accounts. This is the time to require remittance without placing another pointless compliance burden on operations. When I was running a business we processed the going back years we always remitted the super guarantee payment as it was convenient and avoided the irksome task of putting together an annual accrued payment.
