On a related issue we are aware of occurring are Multinational's importing products from their sister or parent companies' overseas and then adjusting the cost of those imported products depending upon how much profit the Australian based entity intend to make in the given country.

In the situation we were aware of the company imported mining equipment from their parent company overseas, adjusted the cost paid to the parent company higher to reduce profitability and then company income tax paid in Australia. And as the accountant explained it to me it was all totally legal and just playing the game.
